First and foremost I would like to thank the Joint Japan/World Bank Scholarship Program for offering me the scholarship opportunity to pursue a Master of Art degree in International Political Economy at the Graduate School of Tsukuba University in Japan. This research paper is written as qualifying criterion for successful completion for the degree. I would also like to express my sincere thanks and gratitude to my research advisors, Professor Yoshito Takasaki, the Main Advisor, Professor Ryo Nakajima, Professor Yoko Kijima and Professor Neantro Saavedra-Rivano. Special mention should go to Professor Takasaki for his constant and constructive guidance throughout the study despite his busy schedule; he offered me the guidance and direction to improve on the paper. My sincere gratitude also goes to all Professors in the Department for their advice and constructive comments during the lunch seminars. I would also like to thank the Programs Administrator, Kumiko Sugimoto for her kindness and making my life an easier one during the thick of the course, thank you for everything. I would also like to thank Ruichi Tamura for the assistance and attendance to my persistence nudging with the R-program queries. I now understand the program better because of your guidance. My gratitude also goes to my classmates for the contributions and discussions we had in preparation of this empirical study and Dr. F.K.K Bokosi on your insights and encouragement. Lastly, I would like to thank my family (mum, dad, Audrey and Suzgo), my fiancée and the little one for been there without me and encouraging me for past two years.

Disclaimer: The findings, interpretations and conclusions expressed in this paper are entirely mine and I sorely take the responsibility for any errors and omissions in this study.
